Trust the Process

"Morris College has proven time and time again that it can produce successful students."

Above: Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges with Dr. Luns C. Richardson (1st row, 7th from left), Mr. Delvyn D. DesChamps, speaker, and Dr. Juana L. Davis-Freeman, Dean of Students

Mr. Delvyn D. DesChamps, a cum laude graduate of Morris College, earned the Bachelor of Science degree in Business Administration in 2009. DesChamps gave an insightful message on Thursday morning during the President's Lecture Series/Who's Who Honor Convocation. DesChamps, reflecting upon his dream to graduate from college, attain a good paying job and be happy, realized that success is a timely and costly process. "When striving after success, you take your entire life working toward it." He explained, "As you go down the road to success, you get so busy with the process that you don't necessarily realize when you have actually achieved success."

Piloting his way through his captivating and engaging speech, DesChamps shared a story of when he purchased his very first duplex for rental purposes. Having reached a point of frustration over the process of attaining ownership of the property, his loan officer reminded him of what she told him from the outset: "Trust the process." Recognizing the potential of the property and that it was only the beginning of other properties he would own, he took out his checkbook and wrote in the memo section "Trusting the Process."

From that experience DesChamps learned the importance of process. "Process protects from missteps." He went on to say, "We trust the process for the fleeting things of life, but when it comes to getting a degree from Morris College, we act as though the process does not apply." Bucking the system, not filling out FASA applications, going to class late, not studying, and refusing to write papers were some of the examples he gave which says that we do not trust the process here at the college.

A witness to the possibility of success, DesChamps encouraged all to trust the process. "Every day that you have the opportunity to live gives you the opportunity to write a different story. You get to choose how your story will end." He challenged students to do those things that will help them leave Morris College as educated young men and women. "We can no longer afford to walk around with a degree and have nothing to show for it intellectually." Grateful that he trusted in the process while a student, he informed students that those who trust the process will never have to wonder what would have happened if they would have trusted the Morris College process.

DesChamps currently serves, within the United States Air Force, as a Logistical Management Specialist within the Intelligence, Surveillance and Reconnaissance (ISR) Directorate for the Global Hawk Weapon System. He is currently pursuing a master's degree in Acquisition Administration at Central Michigan University. He is married to the former Enwar Levine who graduated from Morris College with a Bachelor of Science degree (2006) in Health Science.

President Richardson thanked DesChamps for his wonderful message, wisdom and inspiration; for his being a good example of what Morris College strives to be at all times and for the good reputation he takes into the world of work and service."
