Thomas Pinkston Addresses Honorees

*Honorees with Brandolyn Thomas
Pinkston, President
Richardson and Dean Black.*

Mrs. Brandolyn Thomas Pinkston, former administrator of the South Carolina Department of Consumer Affairs and a former faculty member of Morris College, provided a motivating and insightful message on Thursday morning at the Who's Who Honor Convocation/President's Lecture Series.

Pinkston began by asking the question, "Are you a rising sun or a setting sun?" She defined a rising sun as an individual with a positive attitude who takes responsibility for his/her actions. A setting sun was defined as someone who lacks civility and blames others for his/her problems.

With enthusiasm she charged, "Honorees hold fast." Explaining, "It is not enough to have good grades in today's job market. You must have a positive image." She cautioned students to be mindful of their appearance and respectful of a potential employer's culture and image. She also cautioned against the broadcast of one's personal business on social media.

She armed the students with several essential tools for successfully navigating in the world:

- Teach children values over materialism.
- Be aware of pending legislation that can have a negative impact.
- Be proactive.
- Never let others define you.
- Be respectful of others but be willing to confront when necessary.
- Do not fear criticism – persevere.
- Don't take the business decisions of others personally.
- Listen to other people and their ideas.
- Be a servant-leader.
- Build wealth.

Pinkston also spoke of her great love and respect for Morris College, the legacy of outstanding alumni and our students' ability to compete with the best.

In his closing remarks, President Richardson applauded Pinkston for giving a dynamic and useful presentation that can lead one to a positive path of employment. He also commended the honorees for their achievement and echoed Pinkston's advice, "Hold fast and let nothing deter you from your path."
